After 40 thrilling years of doing business in Seattle's Pioneer Square, we at the Greg Kucera Gallery are announcing we are celebrating by staying in business.

We are not closing. Or even slowing down. We are not transitioning to an online-only or social media gallery. We are not becoming private dealers. We are not becoming an "art fair only" gallery.

Instead, we are embracing our past, our present, and our future by continuing to represent and exhibit some of the finest of contemporary artists. The pleasure in our business continues to be found in encouraging the passionate obsessions of our collectors in response to the intelligence and curiosity of our artists.

For this exhibition, we have invited our represented artists to show pairs of works that reveal where they have been alongside where they are now — both within their career and through their partnership with the gallery.

TERRY TURRELL

CURIOSITY

"One Eye Closed," oil, enamel with carved wood and mixed media, 42 x 32 in.

CHAMPAGNE RECEPTION: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 3-5 PM

Guided by an interest in the duality of the human spirit, Terry Turrell's ideas and self-expression are as endless as the wonder of a child, and perhaps as contradictory. While at first glance his work can have an edge of solemnity, it is equally playful and filled with humor. Turrell's creative nourishment seems boundless, both highly cultured and utterly ordinary. Whether it's music, books, poetry, art history, or the simplicity of daily walks, his backyard, a doodle, or memories, Turrell approaches his practice with an intense curiosity and drive to learn from even the most minuscule moments. That said, it is Turrell's late wife, Loni, who remains the most influential to his artwork. For Turrell the art lies in the process itself, which he lives throughout his every day, keeping Loni's spirit close by.
